COMES BACK AT SEVENTY

Remarkable Career of A. W. Boyd
Failure at 70, Success at 80

"The west is a great country for a young man of settled habits. If his habits are not settled, it is no place for him."

"Erect under the weight of his 84 years, with white hair and flowing beard, A. W. Boyd of Moorcroft and St. Paul, who 'came back' at the age of seventy, expressed this sentiment as he paused a moment in a noonday walk thru the business district. Coming to Wyoming at the age of three score and ten, when most men consider their life course finished, he recuperated financial losses and virtually began life anew. Today he is a wealthy flockmaster with homes in two states," says the Sheridan Post.

His story—the story of this white haired man who struck his stride 20 years beyond the half-century mark—is in many respects remarkable. He went to Casper in the late nineties, when that city was one of the wildest "sheep towns" in the state. There, thru the aid of friends, he found employment without salary. His employer soon discovered that his new employee could cover more ground in a day than he himself, at half the age. Finding his services not only not worthless but valuable, he placed him on a salary of $50 a month and board, and thus was laid the nucleus of a comfortable fortune.

And there, as a herder, he gained the start which brought him wealth and affluence. He became the owner of a large tract of the so-called desert land and engaged in sheep raising. Although a "sheep man" he lived in peace and harmony with the "cattle men" around him. But he felt that the fertile plains of eastern Wyoming were destined for better use than sheep feeding. He heard Professor Campbell lecture and became interested in his system for conserving the rainfall in the semi-arid west and thus turning the great cattle and sheep ranches into cultivated farms. Acting with the characteristic energy of a man eighty-three years young, he enrolled in the Campbell Correspondence School of Soil Culture—the youngest boy in the bunch—and began a systematic study of scientific soil tillage, and today he is turning his sheep ranch into a farm under the instructions of Professor Campbell and his associates. Not long ago he made a visit to Lincoln, Nebraska, to meet his instructors, and assured Professor Campbell an enthusiastic audience from the adjacent sheep and cattle ranches, if he could find time to stop off at Moorcroft and give a talk. To all of us old men of fifty, Mr. Boyd, young at eighty-four and a school boy, is a constant inspiration.

Should any of the old boys or the young men who read this story of Mr. Boyd have an impulse to start life anew on a farm in the west, it would be well for them to do as Mr. Boyd has done—go to the fountain head for information. Write to the Campbell Correspondence School at Lincoln, Nebraska, for a free catalogue of this wonderful school, where boys more than eighty years young are enrolled as students with matured men of nineteen and twenty.—Adv.

George Darling, who left Monday noon of last week for Long Beach, to attend the funeral of his step-father, Thomas Beck, returned to Alliance Sunday morning. George states that the weather in this county is much better than on the coast. Mrs. Beck, who was expected to return with him, did not come but remained there. She will come here probably later in the summer.

Death of Mrs. Bauer

The death of Mrs. Christina Bauer, one of Box Butte county's most estimable pioneer women, occurred at 6:30 o'clock, Tuesday morning, May 10th, from heart failure. She was born in Wittenburg, Germany, June 27, 1833. She came to America in 1851 and married Frank Bauer in 1853, at Hawville, Kentucky. Mrs. Bauer was an earnest Christian, having been a member of the Lutheran church since childhood. Three sons, Frank, William and Charles Bauer and three daughters, Mrs. Ferd Trenkle, Mrs. Fernbach of Morton, Ill., and Mrs. Frank Jesse, survive her. All of them, except Mrs. Fernbach, were present at the funeral, which was held at 2 p. m. today from the home of her son, Charles Bauer, seven miles northeast of Alliance, and conducted by Rev. James B. Brown. The remains were interred in Greenwood cemetery by the side of her husband who preceded her to the other world about two years ago. About two hundred persons were present at the funeral.

DEATH OF MICHAEL MURRIN

Monday night Mrs. W. R. DeSomer received a telegram from Pine Bluff, Wyo., conveying the sad and unexpected intelligence of the death of her father, Michael Murrin. She had no previous knowledge of her father being ill, although he was well up in years, being seventy-nine years old. Mr. De Somber came down from Ardmore on 44 on Tuesday and he and Mrs. De Somber went to Pine Bluff that afternoon, going to Sidney on 393, thence on the Union Pacific west.
